

District Graduate Represents State at National Camp

Janae Dorsey, Kingstree High School's 2019 Valedictorian, was selected to attend the Google Computer Science Summer Institute (CSSI), a three-week computer science camp in Atlanta, Georgia, for graduating high school seniors with a passion for technology. During this camp, Janae learned four coding languages and developed her own web application.

CSSI is an intensive, interactive, hands-on, and fun program that seeks to inspire tech leaders and innovators of tomorrow by supporting the study of computer science, software engineering, and other closely-related subjects. Students attending this camp learn more about their future career, meet and interact with professionals at Google, develop their technical skills, and build important personal networks and friendships with a diverse group of students who share their passion for technology and computer science. Students are also able to get an inside look at Google's unique environment, community, and culture and learn about Google's internship program and technical career opportunities.

Among the twenty-nine students participating in this program were students from Florida, Texas, Georgia, and South Carolina. Janae was the only participant from South Carolina.
